Hi!

I'm Gerardo Salinas and I'm sure that, by the end of this letter, you will be as motivated as I am to collaborate together!

Introducing myself, I am a student of renaissance martial arts, a race car driver (as David Heinemeier Hansson, creator of Ruby on Rails) and a car enthusiast. I studied mechatronics engineering and worked in the industrial maintenance and industrial design areas, where I earned a lot of professional experience.

I had good professional success, but I evaluated the life that cost me and the health that these areas consumed, then I decided to migrate to a healthier environment, with better quality of life and good future. This is the reason why I studied a rigorous full stack web development bootcamp at The App Brewery online, where I learned the basics, specially Front End side and its different tools.

Why Gerardo?

Although I still need more practice in web development and its frameworks, I know how to work. Throughout my career I have had too many obstacles, almost all of them solved, making me a resilient person, self-taught and with many soft skills, both personal and social.

Also, within my engineering degree there were subjects of algorithms, AI, digital systems and state machines, programming in Python, C++/C# and I even used assembly language, I also programmed robots in Arduino since I was a kid, so all this gave me the necessary background to learn new languages and their features.

It is of my knowledge that I still have a lot to practice, but I am sure that my skills and experiences will be as useful for the team as any other technical knowledge, being this the fastest ones to obtain.

I am still preparing myself to be an excellent candidate, so your feedback will be very welcome, I look forward to your comments.

Regards.

Gerardo Salinas.
